Council's call for negotiations.

Still Wo Government The Fragressives, writes "Lamerhay" (Andut Ha'swood), seem to be representing the General Zionists in the coalition negotiations, if their anti-labour stand can be taken as an indication. They and the Religious parties are making exaggerated claims but it is feared that Een-Gurion will come to terms with them on concessions he could not extract from the ishour parties. The paper again sounds the warning that unless the Labour Front constitutes the backbone of the new Government, any other setup will be weak Meanwhile, it goes on, time files and it would be well for Ben-Gurion to bring the negotiations to a satisfactory close.

"Ernanium" (Progressive) writes

the negotiations to a satisfactory close.

"Ensanim" (Progressive) writes that political realism in Israel in 1805 dictates that Mapai seek partnership with those whom, in the heat of the election campaign, it chose to dub "non-prospective" or "unworthy candidates." For lack of choice the party may have to fall back on an all-labour combination but it will be a sorry error if it decides to exclude other constructive fuctors. Meanwhile time presses and the gales to a broad coalition are still open. It all depends upon Mapai's broadmindedness and resdiness to make concessions. "Hatrofe" (World Misrahi) writes that it is difficult to imagine that Mapai will agree to astablishing a government made up of labour parties only. Such a

Economic News from Abroad

The salary hike was originally of the senior grades of civil servants and professionals in public employ, but later the junior grades were also included, and this will have its repercusions among employees of municipal and other public bodies. It would, however, be utterly wrong to say that wages are rising in the public sector alone. A number of minor adjustments have also been taking place in many trades for several menta. Thus, a new wage agreement with substantial upgradings and in the building trade an increase has recently been conducted in the mater in contemplated in the sear future. In agriculture and public works, too, the low emergency wage rates have been sholished and a big rise announced in the wages paid by the Jawish National Fund in afforestation work. There is, however, a general feeling that all these desparate moves are but a prefude to an action of more general character, which could perhaps be conveniently timed at the call of the calendar year, when most wage agreements are to be renered. Should wages rise? In formulating that question one ought to knew to whom it is addressed. In this country wages are not subject to any control, nor is there an arbitration tribunal to whom a dispute in this field could be referred even without the consent of both parties. On the face of it, wages are therefore, governed by agreements between trade unions and employers' organizations, but in reality the latter will hardly seriously oppose a drive for higher wages, though they may put up a show of doing so in order to keep up, appearance. As long as export plays but a minor role in industrial marketing and a negligible one for agricultural produce, and import requirements are largely covered by grants and donations, producers no less than workers benefit from an expanding domestic market and a rising standard of living, while the few losers, etc. It was less than workers benefit from an expanding domestic market and a rising standard in the present juncture the level of wages has largely become an interna present juncture the level of wages has largely become an internal issue for organised labour and it would require a high measure of economic understanding and self-restraint to prevent it from exploiting this situation to the utmost. The developments of the past few months have made it abundantly clear that under the present policy of full employment and welfare no effective stand can be taken against any wage claim made by the trade unions. No one can claim in earnest that a rise in basic wages is necessary in order to maintain the workers' standard of living. It has been amply proved both statistically and by empirical surveys that this standard is rising from year to year. The average real wage rate in industry, for instance, is now life per cent above the 1981 level, but that does not take into account the many improvements in so-called social emoluments. Nevertheless a case can be made out for a further rise by pointing to the fact that other strata of the Israel population have fared even better in these years, and as there is no doubt that the present egalitarian wage system cannot be maintained much longer and that premiums must be introduced for efficiency, quality, long training, dangerous and pioneering work etc. the prospective increase of the national wage bill is likely to be substantial. It is quite suched to the control of the supposed to be.
